Liz is a versatile strategist delivering 15 years of systems thinking, operational excellence, and portfolio management to pioneering biotech firms. Drawing on an extensive toolbox for facilitation, scenario analysis and data-driven decision-making, Liz seeks new and nimble ways of working to deliver shared successes. She is passionate about shaping a unified vision to enable organizations to achieve a better future and deliver long-term value to stakeholders.

Liz has engaged teams across the private, nonprofit, and public sectors to deliver elegant and effect solutions to challenging problems. From connecting low-income families with healthcare services and financial assistance in Los Angeles to developing sustainable investment strategies for the world's largest asset manager, Liz has contributed to the mission of firms both large and small across her multi-disciplined career. Within the biotechnology discipline, Liz's career evolved from driving biologics drug manufacturing schedules to launching global clinical trial to currently managing a portfolio of over 50 neurodegeneration products at Biogen.

Liz was recognized as an Aspen Institute First Movers Fellow in 2015, a fellowship for intrapreneurs seeking to align positive business outcomes with the long-term health of society. Liz holds an M.B.A. from Presidio Graduate School and a B.S. in BioPsychology from Tufts University.
